LD@Home – Our Mission – Your success!

LD@home is a resource designed to support parents, students, and families who are living with Learning Disabilities. Learning Disabilities, often referred to as LDs, affect the learning processes of approximately 10% of Canada's population. At LD@home, we understand that living with LDs can present unique challenges, and that's why we're here to assist you on this journey.

On LD@home you'll find resources from experts designed to help you understand different types of Learning Disabilities and strategies and tools to help students reach graduation and beyond!

Our mission is to empower students and families to navigate the education system, and better understand Learning Disabilities and learning profiles so that every student can reach their full potential.

All LD@home resources are available for free, in a variety of formats. Whether it's a video or webinar, podcast or article – the LD@home website is full of information and inspiration, available 24/7. Our materials are created by experts, educators, parents, and students with LDs. This diverse perspective allows you to learn how to best support students with LDs on a variety of subjects, such as building resilience, transitioning into post-secondary, self-advocacy, and more.

LD@Home can also help connect you to your local chapter. LDA chapters offer direct programming in areas like math, literacy, and social skills, to further equip students for success.

It's important to remember that having a learning disability doesn't prevent you from achieving your goals; it simply means that your brain functions a little differently. With the right support, students with LDs can achieve great success at school and beyond.

So what are you waiting for? See you over at ldathome.ca!
